They're excellent tools for conveying emotions in a beautiful way, but sometimes this literary term is confused with another method of expression: the metaphor. Although similes and metaphors are similar, a metaphor is a figure of speech that directly calls one thing something else that it literally isn't, such as saying "Love is a poison." Similes that are seen in literature and other mediums can provide powerful imagery, especially when it comes to their ability to help us express the emotional depths of love — concepts that can get complicated and that we might otherwise have trouble explaining. Let's unpack what a simile really is and look at some great similes for love.Simile PoemWhat is a simile? While metaphors make a direct comparison — "X is Y" — similes use the words "like" or "as" to compare two things that are not alike — "X is like Y." Writers use these figures of speech to add more depth and meaning to their words, and we also use popular similes sometimes when we speak to others. Similes often make references to nature, animals and other objects but are not meant to be taken literally. Photo Courtesy: Westend61/Getty Images An example of a simile used often is "as busy as a bee." Bees are constantly flying around and pollinating plants, so saying someone is as busy as a bee means that they're working hard or really on the move. Another great example is saying two people "fight like cats and dogs." Cats and dogs are often portrayed as enemies who battle it out regularly. If two people fight like those animals, they probably argue quite frequently.Similes for LoveWe looked at what a simile actually is, but let's look at what makes a good simile for love specifically. When you think of love, it can be fun, joyous and passionate. However, it's not always easy, and things can always go in the opposite direction towards heartbreak. While someone can love another person, their love may be unrequited or it can quickly go cold. Photo Courtesy: Marko Geber/Getty Images Creating a good simile for love involves capturing these ups and downs of a romantic journey. However, you don't want to use basic clichés. Whatever words you choose to describe love in a simile, they should be powerful and meaningful so they're ultimately more memorable or evocative. For example, when two people are getting to know each other, someone's heart may burn for another "like an uncontrollable, blazing fire." However, when you experience the end of a relationship, that pain can feel utterly deflating. This simile reflects that. "Feeling heartbreak is like walking around with tiny shards of glass in your chest." Everyone's life experiences, especially in love, are very different. To write a love simile of your own, think of a quality or adjective that would best describe it for you. Then come up with something else that has that same characteristic. For example, novelist Maurice Hewlett wrote a powerful simile: "Love rushed through him as a river in flood." Floods are powerful and can overtake people quickly, much like love, which is dangerous and could potentially lead to pain for the bugs, moths are enamored and want to explore the light. Just like the moth, Mendes was lured in by a love that was not really for him. Because he didn't walk away, he ended up getting hurt. All of these examples create vivid imagery that readers or listeners can relate to. Adding similes in writing or speech stretches your creativity and writing skills. When it comes to love especially, people will be able to connect even more with your work when you compare it to another thing or concept people might not normally associate with the emotion. MORE FROM REFERENCE.COM Do you love yourself? REALLY love yourself? As in you find joy in wrapping yourself up in a hug of self-love? It's hard some days, I get it...Especially on the days the kids need help with schoolwork, we have our own work to accomplish for a big meeting, laundry to fold and our to-do list is a mile long. We have all of these lists of things to do or others to take care of, and all of those items do need to get checked off the list but let's think about something... What about if today, we add OURSELVES to the to do list? Sounds crazy right?! But seriously friends, what if we became one of those items starred on the list, and we can't go to bed until it is accomplished? Imagine? Imagine finding one way each day, to give ourselves love... A time to give to ourselves gifts, that we only know how to give, and receive those gifts willing... A time set aside, to honor our needs and relish in its glory... A time to care for and cherish ourselves, not just today, but all of the days ahead... A time to pay attention to filling up our cup with happiness and not expecting someone else to create our joy... A time to fall in love with ourselves over and over again. So mamas, when we have those moments of self doubt, where we want to pull ourselves down about all we didn't do today, or make a sarcastic remark about the new weight gain, let's remember, we are the model for our children, and how we want them to love themselves. Those times we so easily laugh at ourselves for not knowing something and our anxiety soars, or the times we rip ourselves to shreds for not being a perfect person, let's remember, there are little ones hearing this negative self-talk. Friends, if we want to change the course for our children, then adding on more moments of self-love, begins with us.
